Narrow fissure veins in andesite which can be traced on the surface for some 1500 feet. Copper-silver mineralization occurs in small isolated lenticular bunches at and near the intersection of two north-south veins with an east-west vein.

DEVELOPMENT

Development consists principally of two tunnels; the lower tunnel does not disclose any mineralization but the No. 2 tunnel about 115 feet above has cut the veins in several places. Additional development consists of winzing and raising and a small amount of stoping has been undertaken.
